“ I didn't know Jason long. I was fourteen when I first met him. He hugged me, and the first words he told me were " You have my nose.". He told me that when he heard I was born, he ran out into the streets screaming to the world that his daughter was born. He saw me graduate high school, and I wished there was more we could have done together, like walking me down the aisle at my wedding. I carry his ashes around my neck every day just to feel so much closer to him. I miss you, Pops, and I'll never forget your smile.

“ Jason was more than just a friend, he was family and I had the honor of referring to him as my brother. We first met in 2009 and became fast friends sharing life's adventures together. He was truly a renaissance man in every way and brought laughter and joy with him everywhere. Jay was always there, a constant, through the ups and downs of life, he was even the "Best Bro" at our wedding. Jay was a loving father to beautiful girls and a caring husband to his wife, whom he loved so dearly. I could write an entire novel on all the wonderful things about Jay as he was so smart, so funny and so down to earth. My life has forever been changed for the better because of knowing him and I will miss him dearly until we meet again on the other side. I wanted to share one of our favorite photos, Jay holding our son Kameron on his wedding day.
