“Jessie for all who truly knew him knows that he was a kind, caring, loving and compassionate man. I remembered a couple winters ago he came home and said I met a family walking down the street on one of the coldest winter days. He asked where they were going. The father replied, we are homeless with nowhere to go. He immediately said to the father taking him aside; you know I cannot in good conscience see you and your family on the street more so with children. He offered the family to stay in his apartment but told the dad that the place needed work. However, they would be dry and warm. He made it home sharing the encounter. I asked do we know them? He replied no, but we had to help them.

If you truly knew Jessie you know that he was not only genuinely kind, caring and compassionate; but he was a man with a great big heart. He never allowed situations, people, etc, to change who he was as a person and man. I love you James, increasingly more every day for being true to you. “The mind forgets but the heart always remembers.” - Anonymous
